the project

The Play Street provides a place for the diverse population of Jackson Heights to interact and to play sports, learn to ride bikes, and generally be active and social. With increasing obesity and diabetes rates among urban residents, space for physical activity is extremely important. The Play Street also reduces the amount of air pollution in the adjacent Travers Park. And it provides a place for community activities such as "learn to bike" clinics, the Greenmarket, composting workshops and other activities that are rare in such a dense neighborhood with so little public open space.

I feel more connected to the other volunteers.

On the other hand, participation has made me even more irritated by other people in the neighborhood (the ones who throw trash / puke / urinate in the garden I take care of).
